Q: Why do those people who don't wear a watch and have an awful sense of time insist on keeping them? It seems to me that most people who don't wear a watch seem to have an awful sense of time, or they're always in a rush. It's frustrating to me that many of those people really seem to try to correct a bad habit that's encouraged by our society. Is this really the case, or are they just lazy? A: Most people don't wear a watch because it doesn't add value to their life. I generally wear a watch for two reasons: (1) It tells the time (2) It tells me the duration of my work Consequently, I wear a watch even when I do not have to indicate time of day. People without watches cannot tell the time, so they are sometimes annoyed that they do not know precisely when they have to be somewhere. I consider this annoyance a reason, but the real reason must be something else, too. Also, watches do not have to indicate time of day either. That's what clocks for. If you are tired, you are sleepy. If you are bored you are grumpy. If you are thirsty you are thirsty. There are plenty of reasons for a lack of purpose of the watch. For another answer, read the following note which was posted here. This invention relates to a liquid transporting polymeric fiber as well as a process for preparing such polymeric fiber. Conventional fabrics made from liquid transporting polymers such as polyethylene terephthalate and polyvinylidene difluoride can be used to transport relatively small amounts of liquid. To our knowledge, there have been no liquid transporting articles made from polyolefins, including polymers and copolymers of vinylidene fluoride and one or more of ethylene, propylene, butadiene, and the like. It would be desirable to have such liquid transporting articles, which would be relatively inexpensive to manufacture.Basilica of San Sebastiano Basilica of San Sebastiano is a church and monastery in Naples, Italy, in the district of the Centro Storico.
